Advising

The McNair Scholars Program is committed to ensuring that program participants are well advised on matters pertaining to the undergraduate program, graduate school preparation, funding opportunities and career choices. Our program, in conjunction with numerous other resources at USC, offers comprehensive and individualized advising. Advising is provided by program administrators, staff, and instructors, as well as faculty.

Graduate School Advising

At any point in the search or application process, scholars can set up an appointment for an individual advising session. No appointment? No time for a meeting? No worries! You can always call, set up a skype chat, IM, or email. We are here for you! We can help talk through difficult decisions, search for schools, review and develop application materials, negotiate offers or whatever else you may need.

Research Advising

We can help you conceptualize your work, conduct a literature review, and analyze and write-up findings. USC Graduate students and faculty members are among the best and brightest in the country, and they too are available for individual meetings to discuss potential research topics, research questions, and methodological approaches. USC's professional staff and academic community are dedicated to helping you develop as scholars

Professional Development Advising

Through our professional development advising, you will learn how to find and submit to conferences, get papers ready for publication, and develop resumes and CVs.
